

Core AI Service — Offer & Go-to-Market

The first paid offering under the brand, and the fastest path to real income.
Personal AI help for real life — not for your business, for your household.

Positioning

(Updated after two rounds of competitive research — see Round 1 and Round 2.)

A Brooklyn-based service for busy households who could probably figure this out themselves — if they had a free weekend and the patience for a stack of YouTube tutorials. PLNLY is the person who shows up, configures the tools around how the household actually runs, and teaches everyone to use them — so the family ends up more capable, not more dependent. That's the deliberate opposite of a delegation service (a human or AI assistant that just keeps doing the task for you): PLNLY hands over the keys.

Who it's for (two segments)

1. Busy, time-constrained households — the lead segment. Affluent families who want AI to take the edge off life admin: scheduling, groceries, bills, appointments, travel planning — while staying in control of their own systems rather than handing them to an assistant. The offer is framed as a capability, not a closed menu: a household should see its own need in it, travel included, even where it isn't spelled out.
2. Parents of college-bound teens — want their kid using tools like NotebookLM well for research, citations, and applications: tool literacy, not subject tutoring, squarely inside academic-integrity lines. (Sub-offering naming still open — see Launch Plan, Week 2.)

Packages (productized — prices are starting points to test against NYC in-home rates)

- Kickstart — one session (~90 min), flat fee (~$150–250). Set up the right AI tools on their devices for their goals; leave a one-page cheat sheet. The easy yes / front door.
- Household AI Setup — 2–3 sessions, flat fee (~$500–900). Full setup + practical workflows/agents (calendars, meal plans, homework guardrails, document help) + a custom "household playbook."
- AI Concierge — monthly retainer (~$99–199/mo). The recurring revenue: ongoing tweaks, add new skills as they need them, a monthly check-in, priority Q&A. As they get better, you add functions.
- Add-ons: Teen AI-Literacy session (parent present); small-group workshop priced per head — great at libraries, parent groups, and LGBTQ+ orgs (mission + lead gen).

Offer a founding-client rate to your first 5 in exchange for testimonials and referrals. Price for your time, not theirs.

Trust & safety (this is differentiation, not just risk)

- Clear written scope + a simple service agreement.
- For minors: parent present, always.
- Look into a basic background check and liability/insurance for in-home work (worth checking; not legal advice).
- A plain data-privacy promise: you don't keep their personal info. Say it out loud — it's a selling point.

Go-to-market (no budget, first 10 clients)

- Warm network first. Your first 5 clients come from people who already trust you — friends, neighbors, your building, the dog park, your communities. Start there.

- Local posts. Brooklyn neighborhood groups (Nextdoor, local FB groups, parent lists), plus library and community-center bulletin boards.
- Partner with community orgs. LGBTQ+ centers, libraries, and parent/community groups: offer a free intro workshop → paid clients. Mission and funnel at once.
- Build-in-public content. Short "AI for real life" tip clips — same content engine as ChartQuest. Doubles as brand marketing.
- Simple plumbing. One-page site + Calendly booking + Stripe/Square for payment. That's the whole tech stack to start.

First-week action list

- ☐ Write the one-line offer + the packages on a single page.
- ☐ List 10 warm contacts to reach out to; message 5.
- ☐ Identify 3 community orgs to pitch a free intro workshop.
- ☐ Draft the founding-client offer (first 5 clients, discounted, for testimonials).
- ☐ Set up booking + payment links.

Educational/consumer service — not financial or legal advice. Confirm insurance, agreements, and any local requirements before working in clients' homes.
